We operate as one, integrated team, in a one-stop shop dynamic, that provides a complete set of skills merged into one contact point for the CEE region.

Foreword

As one of the leading deal advisors in Central & Eastern Europe (CEE), Forvis Mazars is honoured to present a curated selection of the transactions we supported throughout the region in 2025. This year has been formative for dealmaking across CEE, characterised by resilience, strategic repositioning and a renewed sense of momentum across multiple industries and investor groups. As we look back on the deal advisory projects entrusted to us, several overarching themes clearly emerge, each shaping the transactional landscape in distinct ways and collectively reinforcing the region's growing relevance within the wider European and global investment ecosystem.

Firstly, PE funds, especially local ones, remain an active force that is strengthening and shaping the market M&A trends. By consolidating and professionalising privately owned businesses, they increase market activity while also ensuring that these businesses present a target for larger investors investing in CEE, both within and outside the region.

Secondly, substantial EU funding - particularly through programmes such as the Recovery and Resilience Facility - continued to flow into the energy transition, infrastructure development and digitalisation. These injections of capital played a catalytic role in accelerating modernisation and stimulating investment across key sectors, from renewables and green manufacturing to transport, logistics and public-private partnerships.

Thirdly, the macroeconomic environment moved in a direction that brought welcome stability. Inflation levels eased across many markets and interest rates began to soften, providing businesses, investors and lenders with improved visibility and more predictable conditions in which to plan their transactions. This stability contributed to renewed appetite for both cross-border and domestic dealmaking.

Moreover, we shouldn't forget succession planning topic that is here to stay. A large number of owners that have set up their business in the 90's are now approaching their retirement age. Apart from the M&A significance, it is also important from an economical perspective that these businesses continue to operate with the new owner, in this way securing the employment and the economy of local CEE countries.

We also witnessed relatively strong M&A activity and market consolidation in several priority sectors, including manufacturing, energy & renewables, telecommunications, technology, healthcare & pharmaceuticals, consumer goods and defence. These industries continued to show resilience, innovation and strategic importance, making them key targets for both financial sponsors and strategic investors.

In addition, inbound interest remained robust. Corporate buyers and private equity firms from Western Europe and the United States continued to view CEE as a compelling destination for value creation, expansion and capability enhancement. At the same time, an increasing number of outbound transactions emerged from CEE-based companies - particularly into Germany and the USA - demonstrating the growing maturity, ambition and international outlook of regional champions.

A continued wave of industrial nearshoring also shaped investment decisions. As global supply chains were reassessed for resilience and efficiency, CEE remained a strategic location for production, engineering and technological capability-building. Alongside this, succession planning became an increasingly prominent theme, particularly among family-owned and founder-led businesses preparing for generational transitions or exploring partial exits.

Naturally, 2025 was not without challenges. Geopolitical uncertainties - including the ongoing war in Ukraine and wider global trade tensions - reminded all market participants of the importance of effective risk management, rigorous due diligence and long-term scenario planning.

Nonetheless, Forvis Mazars expects the key trends outlined above to continue influencing CEE transactional activity in 2026, sustaining an active and opportunity-rich environment for both local and international investors.

On behalf of our Forvis Mazars financial and tax deal advisory teams, we would like to express our sincere gratitude to all our clients. Thank you for the trust you have placed in us to support your strategic decisions and accompany you through complex transactions across Central & Eastern Europe and internationally. It has been our privilege to work alongside you and we look forward to continuing our collaboration and contributing to your success in the year ahead.
